June 4-7, 2018

As Memorial University Summer School in Philosophy celebrates its fifth year this coming June, we are delighted to announce that Prof. Felix Ó Murchadha has invited us to the National University of Ireland, Galway, for a week of scholarship, comradery and culture.

MESSP is rooted in the conviction that Philosophy flourishes from integration and collaboration. We bring together graduate students, professors, and mentors in a European setting in the late spring of each year for a week of shared scholarship, debate, and discussion on a theme of contemporary significance.

We invite all those interested in participating in MESSP 2018 to submit a 200 word abstract which outlines a clear interest and approach which you will take to the topic. Please prepare this submission for blind review and send it directly to Dr. Sean McGrath sjoseph.mcgrath@gmail.com on the theme by February 10th, 2018.

Memorial students interested in applying for a travel stipend from Memorial University should include a CV with their abstract. Priority will be given to those abstracts most pertinent to the topic from research intensive applicants.

We are currently organizing university accommodations and planning for cultural explorations for all attendees. For upcoming information, see www.messp.org.

Based in the Department of Philosophy at Memorial University in Newfoundland, MESSP is a portal for the exchange of faculty, students, and ideas between North American and European universities. Through graduate seminars in a variety of European locations during the summer semester, MESSP integrates North American faculty and graduate student research. Our aim is to learn in a collaborative environment where European and North American professors and graduate students work together in seminars, presentations and colloquia
