

War, Coercion, and Intelligence

Strategic Studies: An American Perspective

Dr. Ryan Grauer

Mittwoch, 11. Mai 2016, 18 Uhr
Raum 2103

Dr. Ryan Grauer introduces the audience to some of the classic works and arguments in security and intelligence studies, as the topics are conventionally considered in the United States. He gives an outline on the concepts of war and coercion in both theory and practice, as well as about the way in which intelligence can and cannot assist in the pursuit of national security.

About the speaker

Ryan Grauer is an Assistant Professor of International Affairs at Graduate School of Public and International Affairs at the University of Pittsburgh. His research interests center on the sources, uses, and effects of military power in the international system. For more information, visit www.ryangrauer.com.

The lecture kicks off a seminar held on 13, 14, 21, and 22 May 2016. For more information, visit Digicampus.